Dear Madam or Sir,
I am writing in regards to the possiblity of permitting cell phone use on the aircraft inflight. Since to date, it hasn't been proven that cell phone use inflight is safe, why would the FCC consider allowing a possible safety hazard, and putting the lives of people in jeopardy? But most importantly, allowing cell phone use inflight will just open doors for terrorists to communicate with each other and coordinate criminal acts. This would just spell disaster. Also, passengers are more high strung when they fly, and using cell phones inflight could lead to arguments, whether talking on the phone or with fellow passengers. Please reconsider the safety aspect of allowing cell phone usage in flight, rather than catering to the customers and putting their lives in jeopardy. Thank you for your time.
Sincerely,
Moji
